

Intern Application

The WFP internship provides students with an opportunity to gain first-hand experience in a private practice that provides psychological services to children, teens, families, and adults. Formal internships are available for students in graduate and undergraduate programs. As an intern, opportunities exist to help lead social skills group for kids and teens as well as a dialectical behavior therapy group for teens; observe initial intakes; observe individual and family therapy sessions; and observe psychological testing. Depending on the training level of the Master's level intern, an opportunity to have a small case load is also available. In such cases, the intern receives supervision from a licensed clinical psychologist. Interns also have the opportunity to participate in peer supervision/ case consultation with the WFP team.

Interns are provided with experience in learning how to score common psychological tests, learn how to and assist with networking in the mental health field (including community presentations), and conduct school observations. WFP interns also gain first-hand experience in learning how to schedule clients and run the day-to-day aspects of a private practice. Hour commitments are determined on a case by case basis. WFP internships are unpaid, however, a few Master's level interns have been hired to join the practice after a successful internship is completed.

High School: Internships for high school students are typically available in the summer and provide the opportunity to assist in running a week long, half-day summer camp program for preschool, elementary, and/or middle school students. Summer camp interns will work directly with kids, provide behavioral support, and observe first-hand what it takes to run a successful social skills group. Summer camp interns must be available for at least a one week commitment and have reliable transportation. On occasion, a high school level internship position may be available during the academic year to assist in running our 8 week social skill groups for preschool, elementary, and/or middle school students.

To apply:

- Complete the WFP intern application and email it, along with your current resume/ CV, to info@wynnsfamilypsychology.com
 - Please make sure you indicate your availability, preferred start date and end date, and references
- Our office will then contact you to schedule an interview time if you are a good fit and there is availability.
